ORHMA has always been at the head of the pack when it comes to accessibility issues. This issue of Hosting is full of information on legislation and programs designed to help you hire employees that are right for your business.

Though the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act came into effect in 2005, it won't have an impact on the hospitality and tourism industries until 2012 or later. As ORHMA is recognized as leaders in disability, we are working diligently to ensure our regulatory standards are realistic for industry businesses.

Statistics show that by 2025, it's expected that up to 20 per cent of Ontario's population is likely to have a disability. Statistics also show that persons with disabilities are more eager to learn, less likely to call in sick, and to be all around incredible employees.

Thanks to agencies like JOIN (Job Opportunity Information Network), Ontario businesses are beginning to realize that there is a vast pool of untapped talent, of people who will excel in, if not exceed, requirements in the right work environment, if only they are given the chance.

Also in this issue is our 2010 Preferred Accommodations Directory. Please keep it for future reference and support your fellow ORHMA members.

We hope you enjoy this issue of Hosting – and we hope that you find it as inspiring as we have. As always, we welcome your feedback.

Hospitality Insurance Program

$1,182,781 Surplus Achieved!

Members of the Hospitality Insurance Program are pleased to announce that a significant premium surplus of $1,182,781 was achieved during the policy year of December 1, 2008 – December 1, 2009.

"Protected Self-Insurance" (PSI) vs. traditional insurance. If this were a traditional insurance program, all of the premiums would stay with the insurance company, which would be responsible for managing the program and paying claims. But the insurer would also get to keep all of the leftover premiums following a low-claims year. Under the PSI model, when claims levels are low, there is an opportunity for a return of premium.

"Protected Self-Insurance" Structure. All premiums paid into the program are divided into four categories:

- premiums paid to the program's main/excess insurer (one of the world's largest A-rated insurance companies) to protect the program from loss;
- premiums paid to the "Protected Self-Insurance" fund held by SecuriCan General Insurance Company (SGIC);
- payments for administration by HED Insurance and Risk Services;
- payments to SGIC for premium tax.

What happens to the premiums for the "Protected Self-Insurance" fund? All premiums paid to SGIC are either paid out in claims and adjusting costs related to those claims, or are eventually returned to policyholders after reasonable reserves are established for "incurred-but-not-reported" claims. None of these premiums are spent on other purposes, nor will they go to general revenue of the association, or to pay for other association activities.

This program had a great first year. The program experienced a low amount of claims during the first year (December 2008 to December 2009) resulting in surplus. The compliance with risk management recommendations made by HED and the preventative measures participants took to prevent accidents were key factors in minimizing claims. In the first policy year the surplus was $1,182,781, money that would have been retained as insurer profit through the conventional insurance market.

The Program can help your property reduce and stabilize the cost of commercial insurance. The program currently insures more than 1,000 properties through superior method of purchasing commercial insurance while offering superior industry specific coverage. Participation in this program will immediately reduce insurance rates, provide coverage enhancements and returns of premiums in years when claims are low.

Legislative Update: Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act

ORHMA works with government to ensure AODA regulations are reasonable for the industry.

Although the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act came into effect in 2005, most of its provisions will not affect the hospitality and tourism industries until 2012 or later. In the interim, ORHMA is making sure that its regulatory standards are realistic for industry businesses.

"The Act is considered to be a framework piece of legislation, so the details will be set out in regulation," explains ORHMA Government Relations Manager Michelle Saunders. "ORHMA is recognized as a leader in accessibility and has been engaged in all stages of development of the Act and its regulations. The hospitality and tourism industry has been and continues to be represented in AODA discussions."

ORHMA has negotiated some key points in the standards; for instance, "we were able to increase the threshold of what is considered a small business to ensure that the vast majority of our members will not have to comply with most of the administrative details of reporting and documentation," says Saunders.

Of the Act's five focus areas, the first to come into effect is the Customer Service Standard. (For more information, see page 8.) Four other areas are still under development. These include Information and Communications; "there will eventually be a requirement for all written documents to be available in alternate formats, but it is not yet clear what formats those will be," Saunders says. However, "that doesn't mean that everything has to be available in Braille. There are computer programs that make print information Braille-ready."

Likely the next to be developed will be the Employment Standard, which "will require all employers to develop policies and procedures to ensure that employment in their organization is open to anyone and everyone," says Saunders. The spirit of the legislation provides for potential employees to be able to demonstrate that they are able to work, instead of allowing employers to decide that they would not be able.

Saunders notes that Ontario employers already provide numerous accommodations to employees at low or no cost, such as offering flex hours and split shifts, "so accommodation may not be as complicated as one might assume."

The Built Environment Standard will be very technical in nature, and will eventually become part of the Ontario Building Code as it applies to new building. Following ORHMA's discussions with legislators, "we're pleased that the draft standard does not include retrofits at this time," says Saunders.

The Transportation Standard will not likely affect restaurants, although it will have an impact on hotels that run their own shuttle services. "It would capture everything from the physical structure of the vehicle to assisting passengers safely and properly," Saunders says. There is no timetable yet for implementing any of these remaining standards, all of which are still in development..

"It was very important that ORHMA sat at the table to help government and the disabilities community understand the realities of our business," she says. "There's no question that being accessible is the right thing to do. Our role is to make sure that the implementation of the right thing is practical and reasonable and allows members to continue to run their businesses."

Countdown to New Customer Service Standards

Sharing best practices will ease implementation of AODA Customer Service Standard.

"The Customer Service Standard lays out requirements for employers to develop policies, programs and procedures to be able to provide equitable service to customers with disabilities," says ORHMA Government Relations Manager Michelle Saunders. "There will be training requirements to make sure your staff knows how to address people with disabilities over the phone, in person and over the internet."

Saunders points out that there are already leaders in the industry who have considerable expertise in the area. "ORHMA will be working with government to develop best practices, and we feel strongly that it is the duty of the public sector to go first in making the investment to develop best practices so businesses can piggyback on that."

Although there is a requirement for training, the standard does not explicitly define what form it may take. ORHMA's training partner, the Ontario Tourism Education Corporation (OTEC), offers programs created for the hospitality and tourism industries. These include a half-day course for front-line employees ($149 per person) and a full-day course for owners, managers and human resources professionals, who need to understand the Act in considerable detail ($299). There is also a two-day train-the-trainer session ($995) for larger organizations. Special pricing is available for ORHMA members.

"People are so busy running their business that they do not have the time to become experts themselves, so that's why they come to us for professional training," says OTEC Vice President of Client Services Wendy Paradis. "We're going to have training in the various ORHMA regions, so they don't have to come in to Toronto. We train all over the province."

OTEC's sessions are designed to help front-line employees understand and appreciate the importance of providing excellent services to people with a disability. The sessions cover different types of disabilities and how they can be recognized, as well as specifics like tips on serving someone who has a service animal. "There is a knowledge check at the end, but the training programs are really interactive and experiential," says Paradis.

The training sessions also touch upon the buying power of people with disabilities and the fact that this population will grow in the future. Paradis notes that people with disabilities in Canada are currently responsible for $25 billion in customer buying power. "As the baby boomers age, the number of people with disabilities will increase dramatically," she says. "Adults with disabilities will represent up to 25 per cent of the buying power, and each person with a disability influences the spending decisions of three other people."

Besides hands-on training, there are other options to consider. With more than 1,000 employees, of whom some 700 are casual staff, the Metro Toronto Convention Centre (MTCC) has opted for a self-directed online training course called Serve-Ability available through the Ministry of Community and Social Services website (Mcss.gov.on.ca).

As a public facility, the MTCC was required to have all staff trained and ready by January 1, 2010. "We've had policy around accessibility for a number of years, so we've always had a general corporate philosophy, but the AODA is drilling down to a much more refined level," says MTCC Human Resources Manager Karen Wood. "If I could give any piece of advice, it would be: do not leave this until the last minute."

Staff at the MTCC can choose to take the training on their own time at home, or onsite during paid time. "The onsite program material takes about 30 minutes to cover, and we have developed a 20-question true-or-false multiple choice quiz because we have to demonstrate that people have completed the program," says Wood. An advantage of the at-home option, she says, is that employees whose first language is not English can arrange to have a family member assist them.

"Staff has been fairly receptive to this; they've understood the need for it," she says. "For us, it's about making sure that all of our customers have the fullest opportunity to engage with what we do here, and that is what customer service should be about. It's pretty simple."

Says Saunders: "The intent is to open your mind to a new way of dealing with disabilities that takes into account specific needs so that everyone is treated with equity and with respect."

JOIN

The battle of staffing has become a little easier thanks to the Job Opportunity Information Network for Persons with Disabilities

It's all about the demographics these days when it comes to trying to staff the hospitality industry, and the numbers haven't been onside for a long time. Even before the economic downturn, staffing had become an uphill battle in this industry typically staffed, as it is, by younger people. The aging of the baby boomers, and lower birthrates mean fewer younger people in the employment pool. Enter JOIN© (The Job Opportunity Information Network) for persons with disabilities, and that hill is flattening out by the day.

JOIN is a network of 50 community agencies funded by ODSP (Ontario Disability Support Program) Employment Supports in Toronto and Central East Region, with ORHMA and the Greater Toronto Hotel Association (GTHA) offering expertise, oversight and logistical support. The organization assists persons living with disabilities to find and maintain employment, and assists employers to recruit qualified candidates to meet their hiring needs.

The JOIN group is made up of over 20 agencies that work with individuals with varying disabilities and barriers to employment. "The concept is to share jobs that each agency has a line on," explains ORHMA Diversity Recruitment Specialist David Holman, "to find the most suitable candidate. In the past, quite often, a certain agency would have a job but didn't happen to have a job seeker looking for that kind of employment. Instead of not satisfying the employers' needs, they've come together in JOIN to share that job information, thus ensuring that the employer gets the best candidate for that position."

And essential to the whole process is ORHMA itself. "It's a partnership program. The ORHMA delivers the program in partnership with the JOIN Group," says Holman. "We bring employers to the table, and hold education and marketing seminars and other related tasks for JOIN. ORHMA is a key facilitator for JOIN, and a key partner in delivering the services."

The ORHMA is not new to this game, having long been at the forefront of the accessibility movement. Holman points out that the ORHMA has sat on several advisory committees looking into accessibility issues, and it has a history of working closely with government around accessibility issues.

In fact, these efforts are at least partially to ensure compliance with the Accessibility of Ontarians with Disabilities Act (2005). "It really brings us up to speed in terms of readiness with the new regulations coming through from government to better integrate people with disabilities," notes Tony Elenis, President of the ORHMA, adding that, "unfortunately, people with disabilities have traditionally been overlooked in the workforce, primarily due to myths and stereotypes." Terry Mundell, President of the Greater Toronto Hotel Association, and former ORHMA president concurs, citing myth busting as one of the program's chief benefits. "The great thing about JOIN is that you deal right up front with any needs that may exist for a candidate you might choose. There is no mystery about whether an employer can accommodate that candidate. It introduces certainty into the process for the hotel community, as well as the disabilities community."

More than that, ORHMA members who are using JOIN are discovering that a disproportionate number of their disabled employees are also becoming their star employees. "There is a very low turnover," emphasizes Elenis, "and the loyalty demonstrated by this sector is also at the top of the employment pool. Member employers who might have been hesitant to hire the disabled initially have realised that their productivity is second to none – something that probably surprised many of them."

Employers also end up with a better understanding of their guests with disabilities, adds Holman, increasing the comfort level for all concerned.

Finally – and of particular benefit for an industry that doesn't typically have the luxury of time when positions need to be filled – the fact that JOIN protocols run like a well-oiled machine make it a perfect fit for the hospitality sector. "JOIN fills the role of employment agency for us, but they also do it in a way that means we get what we need, when we need it," points out Mundell, adding that traditional means of attracting employees often meant an eight to 12 week delay, which simply doesn't meet private sector hiring practices. "The JOIN process, on the other hand, brings people to our door right away with the skill sets that we need," he says. "It's the immediacy, and the efficient matching of jobs with people possessing the skill sets that we need that JOIN does so well. It's tried, tested and true – we know this system works."

While the economic downturn will surely end, the population will continue to trend older for the foreseeable future. Lucky then, for the hospitality industry, that JOIN is there to help it mine this previously untapped vein of talent, skill and dedication in the disabled community.

Tim Hortons

Synonymous with donuts and double doubles, Tim Hortons has changed the way Canadians enjoy their morning fixes. Thanks in part to the progressive work of one owner, Mark Wafer, the classic Canadian chain is also becoming more and more accessible to employees with disabilities.

For Wafer, the understanding that people with disabilities could be an asset to their operations came early when, in early '95, he and his wife Valerie opened their first location in Scarborough and quickly found themselves in dire need of an extra employee. Through a local school teacher, Wafer was introduced to one Clint Sparling, a young man with down syndrome who was eager to help and ready to start. Wafer trusted his instincts about Sparling and hasn't looked back since.

"Clint Sparling is a success story," claims Wafer. "I needed a new employee and Clint needed a meaningful job. The fit was perfect. He began work with us in January of 1996, has been a full time employee ever since and has worked in three different stores."

As a Rotarian, Wafer has worked to dispel the myths associated with hiring people with disabilities and urge employers to open themselves up to the positive aspects of doing so. "The benefits are real and tangible," says Wafer, citing that due to the 70 per cent unemployment rate amongst people with disabilities, they are often the staff members that value their job the most, adding: "Considering the cost of employing new people, this is a huge benefit to the employer. As well, our employees with disabilities perform better and work harder. Some may work a little slower, but they certainly do so with more accuracy, show up earlier, and leave later. These are all real and tangible benefits to any company."

In his experience, the consistent support from Community Living Toronto has been all but essential to training and managing his employees with disabilities. The cost to accommodate, he adds, is minimal. To date, Wafer has hired over 50 people with disabilities in many positions and currently employs 11 such employees throughout his seven locations. His efforts have also caught the attention of Tim Hortons head honchos who have begun incorporating his ideas and outlooks into other locations.

Boom Breakfast

Making breakfast for busy Torontonians is no small order, and yet Boom Breakfast has been making quite a name for itself doing just that. Starting with its first location in Little Italy circa 2006, Boom Breakfast's fast growing reputation for great food and great service prompted Tony Cappellano to open two more locations with his sister Mirella Pereira. In all locations, the brother and sister duo has hired numerous employees with disabilities whom – as Cappellano would be first to tell you – have been just as important to Boom Breakfast's success as anyone else in their employ.

From line cooks to porters, Cappellano claims nothing but positive results from bringing people with disabilities into the restaurants' operations. "I have one woman, Ornella, who lives with a hearing disability and who can't take a smile off her face," recalls Cappellano. "She works in the open dish pit, busses tables and she is one of our best employees. She has learned about our concept, what's expected of her, the importance of customer service and knows the responsibilities that come with her employment. What more can you ask for from an employee?"

With a little training and qualified trainees, Cappellano notes that welcoming people with disabilities into the Boom Breakfast business hasn't been as big an issue as other potential employers might think. "Firstly, you need to be willing to do so. [hiring and training] requires just about the same amount of time as it would if you were hiring someone without any disability."

With advice for employers considering hiring someone with a disability, Cappellano adds: "There are plenty of them out there; they are eager, dependable and most pleasant. Most importantly, they have a place in our society."

Breaking Through Barriers

Ontario businesses are beginning to realize that having a disability shouldn't be viewed as a bad thing

The good news is: barriers are slowly but surely beginning to fall.

Thanks to great work by agencies like JOIN© (Job Opportunity Information Network) for persons with disabilities, myths and misconceptions about employing people with disabilities – and even their employability – are starting to slip away. That said; trepidation still exists for employers who have yet to explore this increasingly vast sector of the employment market.

Much of the problem lies in the word itself; if the word is broken down literally into its Latin form, it actually means "without skill or ability." In the past, efforts were made to eliminate the term "disabled" in favour of the more cumbersome – if politically correct – term "differently-abled," the euphemism didn't stick, even among those it sought to benefit.

"I think the word 'disabilities' says it all," says David Holman, ORHMA Diversity Recruitment Specialist. "It's an unfortunate term because we certainly know that individuals with disabilities definitely come with skills, degrees and a desire to work, just like most everybody else in our society."

Other factors at play, explains Holman, include the fear of accommodation – the question of whether a company can logistically accommodate a particular worker into the workplace – and (let's just throw it onto the table) ignorance; or perhaps more gently, a lack of knowledge. "In the last 50 years, we've come a very long way in our understanding – in closing institutions, for example – as people realise that individuals with disabilities are capable of working," credits Holman, "but it still wasn't something that was talked about. You're now starting to see people with disabilities on American television, whereas 10 years ago, that would have been almost unheard of. Canada needs to do more of that."

Asked if some of the laws that have come onto the books in recent years regarding accessibility and diversity haven't – in effect, at least – forced employers to experience the benefits of hiring people with disabilities, and be enlightened as a result, Holman chuckles and notes that the notion is "nice in theory, but if as an employer, I have a negative stereotype of what it means to have a disability, then, those new laws and regulations don't necessarily mean that I'm going to get on the bandwagon."

According to Holman, one of the biggest issues facing people with disabilities in regard to advocacy, is that groups are so focused on their own disability type, it hinders the formation of a larger, more succinct, inclusive disability movement. "They haven't gotten onto the same page to declare that they will all stand up together."

According to numbers released by Statistics Canada almost two years ago, the national disability rate increased 1.9 percentage points from its level of 12.4 per cent in 2001 to reach 14.3 per cent in 2006. At that rate – which will likely increase as the population ages – roughly one in six of us will qualify as disabled within the next couple of years. If ongoing efforts by agencies like JOIN haven't dispelled the stubborn myths and misconceptions by then, before long, sheer numbers will have to force them to the wayside. Perhaps only then will employers discover that they have been hamstringing themselves from enjoying the benefits of this very able demographic of potential employees.
